

Branches of Government

By: Amira Boucher

My constitutional monarchy uses the three branches of government to alleviate work from the Queen shoulders, however, these branches are mostly still dictated by her majesty. The three branches in her majesty's land are judicial, executive and legislative. The three branches are also set in place as a backup government just in case her majesty's monarchy is overthrown.

The executive branch, is headed by her majesty, Queen Amira Rose, and consists of her majesty's heir/heirress, a royal guard, and her majesty's advisor. The executive branch serves to keep order among the other branches, approve and/or deny drafted laws, bills, and war prompts, and lead the county. In my country the executive branch is the most powerful, and most important branch compared to the other three branches, and compared to the united states version of the executive branch.

My executive branch is set up similarly to the United States' in that of its people (President - Queen/King, Vice President - Heir/Heirress, Cabinet - Advisors), and some of the tasks that my executive branch carries out. Other than those two similarities I would say it's pretty different. My executive branch can veto any and all laws that they so wish, however, the other branches can't veto the executive branches demands; The United States' executive branch can be vetoed by the other branches. My executive branch doesn't rely on the other branches to exist whereas the United States' does.

My executive branch is more or less a one "man's" job, where as the United States executive branch is run and overseen by multiple people. That being said there are still more than one person as to alleviate stress from Her/His Majesty's shoulders.

My legislative branch is very similar to the United States' in that of the age requirement and term length and much more. Much like the United States legislative branch a person must be voted in. Most parliamentary procedures in both my legislative branch and the United States' are the same as well. My legislative branch, like the United States' has a Congress and a Senate. My Congress and Senate like the United States can vote in a Speaker of the house. Also like the United States my Congress can propose war.

My judicial branch consist of a Chief of Justice, and a maximum of 8 associates. The Chief of Justice is His/Her Majesty. His/Her Majesty as well as Congress can elect up to 8 persons to assume the title "Associate Justice". My judicial branch differs from the United States' in that the main judge is the Queen/King him/herself. In the United States' judicial branch the president and the chief of justice are seperated, however, I felt as the Queen/King of a country the leader of my country should have his/her foot in every aspect of our nation.

To close, my branches of government are similar yet very different to those of the United States'. I choose to base my branches of the United States' because I feel as an American I should understand them better. I would like to add that the changes I have made to the aspects of these branches partially reflect on aspects of the United States branches I think should be changed and partially reflect on the interest of my imaginary government. For example, a Queen and or King should have a lot of power considering their title therefore they have reign over most aspects of these three branches. In most cases of Queens and Kings there are no branches whatsoever, but I felt that was a rather inefficient way to rule a country as there are so many things you would have to think of and being one person that would be rather difficult.

Furthermore, I simply enjoyed the thought of having more things and people to dictate.
